SEC-08 — Grey Man

The Entry Point to the Grey Man Track

Why one member's habits are the whole group's exposure

BOTTOM LINE UP FRONT

SEC-08 establishes the collective-security mindset that every course in the Grey Man Track builds on, then teaches the pre-movement discipline of learning what you need to know about a place before you're standing in it. It is the entry course for SEC-09 through SEC-13, not a standalone awareness talk, and it does not require any prior security training.

Why This Matters

A network doesn't fail at its strongest wall. It fails at its weakest joint — a reused credential, a forgotten account, a routine grown too predictable. Your habits are never just yours; they're joined to everyone connected through your access, whether you think about it that way or not.

> "The act of gathering information is itself observable — how you learn something can expose you as clearly as what you learn."

THE KEY CONCEPTS

Collective Security	One member's carelessness is everyone's problem. Security framed as protecting others changes the calculus entirely.
The Weakest Joint	Networks fail at their weakest point — a reused credential, a forgotten account — not their strongest defenses.
Mapping Your Exposure	Identifying who and what is actually connected through your own access, and closing the single most-exposed link.
Pre-Movement Information Discipline	Know exactly what you need before you go, gather it without drawing attention, and stop once you have enough.

COURSE LESSONS

Lesson 1: Security Is a Group Obligation
The collective-security mindset that grounds the whole Grey Man Track, and how to map your own most-exposed connection.

Lesson 2: The Pre-Movement Information Discipline
Knowing what you need before you go, gathering it without drawing attention, and stopping once you have enough.
